The notion that every human being has a right to a clean, healthy and sustainable environment has caught the imagination of people across religions, cultures, constitutions, countries and continents. According to the UN Environment Program, about 150 countries have environmental provisions in their constitutions, including approximately 88 that recognize an express constitutional right to a healthy environment.

And yet, there is little evidence as to how, where and why environmental rights have improved outcomes for human beings or nature. This presentation aims to elucidate the reasons for this, including the inherent and institutional challenges of implementing environmental rights.
